

Yggdrasil

Acceptation

The Germanic people had a special conception of the world. They didn't have only one world but even nine worlds.

You can define the nine worlds also as consciousness plains.

The scheme describes the different aspects of existence: the birth, the growing-up, the resistance and the death.

All of them belong to life and all are necessary.

These nine worlds consist on the ash "Yggdrasil", a very big tree that connected the sky, the earth and all worlds with each other.

In his branches cavorted all sorts of animals and the roots there nibbled the Nidhöggr-Dragon, a snaky creature full of envy and distrust.

Yggdrasil symbolized on the human plain the backbone.

With this most holy tree of all, you can understand the special relation between Germanic people and trees.

Trees were holy and even nowadays is the "German oak" taken as a synonym for intensity and for steadfastness. Like the Saying " a man like a tree, is a big and a powerful man".

Before the old knowledge was abused, the people knew the energy of the trees and that people can learn of them.

All worlds on Yggdrasil and all facets of the human consciousness are important and belong to us and to life.

The art is to keep them all in balance.

Structure of the three plains of Yggdrasil

1. The sky

Here is the Burg Asgard, which is the home of the certain god gender of Asen.

2. The earth

Here is Midgard, the home of the people.

3. The underworld

Here is Hel, the empire of death and the hell.

And here is the underworld of Asen.
